AUTHENTICITY

In all the leadership workshops, conversations, and "best practice" chats I've had over the past twenty-plus years, the common thread throughout them all is to be inclusive and be respectful to others.

IDENTIFYING YOUR PERSONAL VALUE SYSTEM (con't)

B After you go through the list, you'll probably have about 15 to 30 words that meant something to you. Take these words and write them on a Post-It® note or notecard. Cluster the words that are similar in meaning to you. If there's some words that are interchangeable to you, pick the one that most resonates to you. You'll probably end up with about 7 to 10 clusters.

C With your word clusters that are left, sort them in order of importance: the one you feel strongest about to the one end of your list and those you feel least strong about on the other.

HOW TO AMP UP YOUR COURAGE

1

Try a new activity ... ESPECIALLY one you've never done or aren't particularly good at!

2

Delegate a work task to someone ... and DON'T micro-manage them!

Courage isn't the absence of fear: it's the ability to confront it, stand your ground, and hold firm in your belief that what you're doing—and why you're doing it—is right.

EMPATHY

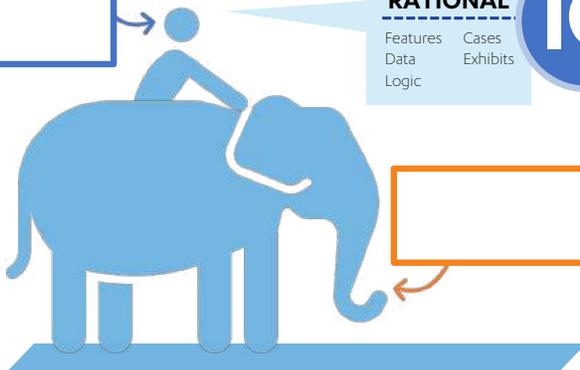

WHAT'S IT LOOK LIKE?

"THE ELEPHANT & THE RIDER"*

Having empathy and managing emotions are vastly under-represented in our modern workplace. The focus on the numbers, return on investment, and fiscal results is overshadowing our need to also balance this against how we're doing business, and how people feel about working for and with us.

EMPATHY

As the workplace demographics shifts, organizations—and smart leaders—best be looking at how to up their collective emotional intelligence or lose out in retaining the best talent and best customers.

HOW TO AMP UP YOUR EMPATHY

THE "WHAT-WENT-WELL" JOURNAL ...

Each night write down the five things that went well during the day—could be big things (landed that big client!) to small things (the cafeteria had liver for lunch!). Some nights it will be easy to rattle off five, while other nights you'll struggle to get just one.

What you're doing is reprogramming your mind to look for the positive things in your world each day, especially on those really, really hard days.

Studies show within two to three months it will actually change your perception to be more positive. Oh, and use a separate notebook or even your smartphone to record your thoughts.

COMMUNICATION

WHAT'S IT LOOK LIKE?

ACTIVE LISTENING

KEY PARAPHRASING STATEMENTS:

- 1 "I'm not sure I'm with you, but what I'm hearing is ..."
- 2 "If I'm hearing you correctly ..."
- 3 "So, from your perspective you see ..."
- 4 "Listening to you, it seems as if ..."
- 5 "So, as you see it, the thing you feel is most important is ..."
- 6 "To me it's almost like you're saying ..."

OPEN-ENDED QUESTIONS (OEQ'S):

- 1 "Help me understand how you got to that perspective ..."
- 2 "What alternatives have you thought about ...?"
- 3 "What do you mean by ...?"
- 4 "What could some of the consequences be ...?"
- 5 "What other possibilities are there...?"
- 6 "What were the considerations that led up to this ...?"
- 7 "Why is this element the most important aspect?"
- 8 "Where might this rule not necessarily hold true?"
- 9 "How else could this situation be explained?"

"SILENT COLLUSION" is when – while a disparaging remark, stereotypical perspectives, or any other hurtful phrase is said – no one says or does anything to refute the statement; people remain silent. That silence implies that the collective "we" agrees with that statement. As an LGBTQ+ Leader, we strive to create an inclusive environment, and that includes stopping uninclusive remarks, even if it's uncomfortable or icky. Here's six ways you can beat silent collusion in your workplace ... and beyond!

THE 6 WAYS TO BEAT SILENT COLLUSION

M

Ask yourself: "is the statement something that impacts me personally?"

WHAT IT COULD SOUND LIKE

As a woman, Bob, I find that statement to be inaccurate. I consider myself a very good driver.

PROS

focuses on you as a person, not the stereotype

CONS

could be perceived as confrontational

O

Call out any "absolutes," stereotypes, or gross generalizations you may hear

So, Bob, you've driven with every woman in the world?

it may bring the microinequity to the consciousness

could be perceived as confrontational

Point to a specific example that refutes the statement being said

Well actually, Bob, I think we would both agree that Juanita – who drove us to lunch yesterday – is an awesome driver who happens to be female.

it illustrates an example that the person saying the microinequity can relate to could provide a way for the owner of the biased statement to "brush away" the microinequity they stated

S

Saying a non-word that at least indicates you don't agree with what's being said

Woah! Whaaat?
Damn! Huh?

not very confrontational; sends the message you don't agree with the statement

it doesn't go far in addressing the statement; could be perceived as your typical reaction

Ask the person exactly what they meant by their comment

Bob, what exactly did you mean by that statement?

directly addresses the statement, may allow the "microaggressor" to break out of their unconscious; neutral in tone

be very careful of the tone in which you use

M

Physically remove yourself for the situation

your non-verbal movement will speak volumes

it's nothing more than acknowledging that you don't agree with the statement; doesn't actually address it

RELATIONSHIPS

You as the + Leader are Mr (or to be inclusive Ms or Mx) Green Jeans; it's your job to create the right context to not just start or plant the seeds of a relationship, but to cultivate and grow it.

LEADERS BUILD RELATIONSHIPS THRU SUPPORT

HOW TO AMP UP YOUR RELATIONSHIPS

1

GROW THE OTHERS ... Develop a plan to grow the other Leadership Competencies we've shared ... grow these while you grow your relationship-building skills!

2

DON'T DINE / CAFFEINATE ALONE ... There's an old saying about never having lunch alone. Take that to heart, and—at least twice a week—go to lunch or coffee with someone in your network. Mix it up: go with close allies and work acquaintances. Don't overplan but be prepared to build rapport and ask questions to get to know the other person. Approach these events as fun and not as a work-networking-thingy.

CULTURE

Managing change and shaping the organization is a powerful strategy for any leader. But I've seen only a small number of folks really do this well; and it's those who can balance the needs of the business with the human aspect that make up the organizations that succeed.

TOP 4 WAYS YOU CAN SUPPORT CULTURE CHANGE

HOW TO AMP UP YOUR CULTURE SKILLZ

BUILD THE CHANGE CASE: Identify something within your workplace that needs changing and make it happen. Be sure that you thoroughly identify the change, initiate the conversation about what you think is the change with the right stakeholders, and identify the resources and plan needed to make the change happen. Have courage and present this to your leadership and see what happens ... you just might make some change!

- What did you identify?
- What's the project plan for executing this change?
- How will you know if (and when) you succeeded?
- (After the change) What's changed for you as a leader as a result of this activity?
